10 Things Partners Need To Know.

Live The Standard. Share The Proof.

01 Be The Living Proof First.

Your story and personal progress come before any call to action. Show how you live The Operator Standard every day. Let people see a person doing the work, not a billboard.

02 Earn Your Authority.

Share “here’s what I’m doing” before “here’s what to do.” Speak confidently from experience. You don’t need life figured out to help someone who is where you once were.

03 Be About It. Out Loud.

Live the standard you talk about. Show the work behind your progress. When you fall short, own it and share how you’ll use The Operator Standard to get back on track.

04 Share Your Wins Every Day.

Complete your Critical tasks, then share your streak and partner link. Add a photo and a lesson from your day. Make sharing a daily habit that keeps you publicly accountable.

05 If They Ask, Walk Them In.

Lead with your story, not just a link. Ask why they’re interested and talk like a friend who wants to help. Explain what you use, how you use it and why it matters to you.

06 Build For People.

Create for people, not an algorithm. A suggested mix: 70% width, 20% depth, 10% action. Share the good, bad and ugly honestly, without inflating yourself or putting yourself down.

07 Share Your Life. Skip The Pitch.

People can sense a sales pitch. Show your life and progress with the app naturally. When you include a call to action, give people a reason to care even if they never join.

08 Influence Starts With Trust.

You don’t need to be an influencer. Start with coworkers, family and gym friends. Word of mouth matters; online expands your reach. Be someone others can trust with their goals.

09 Keep Showing Them.

Someone who isn’t interested today may be ready in six months. A future win or honest post may connect when the timing is right. Keep sharing. If you don’t show it, they won’t know.

10 Give People A Path.

You’re offering a path to personal excellence. The impact can extend beyond the app: one person, one task, one post at a time. Any conversation could help someone take the next step.